STIMSON-CONOVER

By MARTHA V. MONROE

One night a man was brought before the sergeant at the desk in a police court churged with burglary.

"Hello, Stimson," said the sergeant. "You turned up again? I haven't seen you for so long that I thought you'd

"I'm not Stimson," replied the man, who was dressed in working costume, "and I've never been here before." "Take him in."

The next morning the case came up before the court. There had been a burglary in Ben Warfield's store. Warfield had entered his place of business with a light and cornered a man robbing his cash drawer. The robber knocked him down and ran. The storekeeper got up, followed, called a policeman, and together they made chase. Warfield in court testified that while in pursuit of the fugitive he had turned and walked toward them. Undoubtedly knowing be would be captured, be hoped to go by them unrecognized. But Warfield had got a good look at him in his store by the light he carried and knew him at once. The rest of the evidence against the prisoner was furnished by a picture in the rogues' gailery which, though it was not a flattering likeness, was near enough like him, taken with Warfield's evidence, to and his bride. convict him.

The prisoner claimed that he was John Conover, a workman in a foun- shire trying to avoid a heat surplus. dry. His employer's superintendent was called to the stand and testified deavoring to keep up the traveling recthat the man, under the name of Conover, had gone to work for the concern a week before, claiming that he had not been employed for some months. That was all the witness knew about Being an old offender. Stimson was ment to the penitentiary for seven years. Before he started his wife came to see him, acting bysterically and declaring that she and her children were starving. This only confirmed the verdict, though it excited sympathy. No one ever heard of Stimson having had a wife and family. But the case was decided, and there is too much work before the courts except in the cases of those who have money to pay lawyers and costs for a little matter like that to attract even attention.

One night three years later a man was brought into the same sergeant as had received Stimson, whereupon the sergeant, who was a facetious man,

"Hello, Stimson! You here again? I haven't seen you for so long that I thought you'd reformed."

"I'm not Stimson. My name's Conover." "Well, I like that. I'd know that mug of yours among a thousand. We've got you in the gallery. But what did you say about being"-"Conover?"

"Yes-Conover. It seems to me the name's familiar. Now I remember all about it. The last time you came in here you tried the racket of mistaken identity; said your name was Conover. But hold on. You were sent up for even years. You couldn't get out this early on good behavior. When did you break jail?"

"Sergeant," said the prisoner, changing his tone, "I was clingin' to a straw, and that remarkable memory of yours has broke it. Three years ago you sent up an innocent man who looked like me, and this time I was thinkin' I might possibly get off by claimin' to be blm. But it won't work."

The sergeant looked at the man, greatly puzzled.

"Did you do the burglary Conover was sent up for?" he asked.

"Yes, I done it. They chased me, and all of a sudden I heered 'em stop. The next day I sor in the crim news in the paper that a bloke as looked like me was took. He's doln' my time now, If you wasn't on to it I'd 'a' tried to prove I was him. No credit to the way you cops work things that I didn't. Your memory floored me."

The real Stimson went up, and in time the real Conover came down. One night he walked into the station and stood before the sergeant. He was not recognized. Maddened by his imprisonment for an offense he had not committed, deprived of the power to work for his wife and children, he had attempted to escape, was caught and had 3263 been treated with unusual severity. No wonder the sergeant didn't know him. He had aged in appearance twenty years. "Who are you?" asked the sergeant. "John Conover!"

Used us he was to the hard side of life, the sergeant started.

"Are you sure I'm not Stimson?" "I had nothing to do with your case; the court did it. You were unfortunate in looking like a jailbird." "I came to say that while I've been in jail my two little ones have died for want of proper attention. My wife still lives. If this were not so you would go after my children."

The man walked out, and the sergeant wiped the aweat from his brow with his coat cuff. He knew by Cop-over's look that only a life stood between him and death.

The next day Conover walked into in the hope of locating Louis Restelli, Warfield's store. Warfield, hearing a footstep behind him, turned.
